

Why Does Executive Benefit Benchmarking and Strategic Planning Matter So Very Much?

On the surface, two plans may appear equal.

Yet, when skillful executive benefits professionals analyze the plans, disparities become glaringly obvious. Cost to the company, reward to the executive, flexibility of benefits, and tax ramifications can vary drastically.

Plan sponsors typically work diligently to decrease the costs of qualified retirement plans, healthcare plans, and other welfare benefit offerings. But do you or your company apply the same level of scrutiny to your executive benefits strategies? Do you know how your plans measure up to your peer company benchmarks?

The Power of Looking Behind the Curtain

When a company maximizes the effectiveness of its nonqualified deferred compensation strategy, it improves continuity, reduces vulnerability to talent loss, and increases earnings. Executives are positioned to achieve their personal financial goals and a meaningful partnership is built between key talent and the plan sponsor.
